Please welcome 3 new faculty members to LSU English!

John Miles (Ph.D., Duke University) comes to LSU as a Professional-in-Residence for 2015-16. He joined The University of Memphis as an Assistant Professor of English in 2009, where he has taught both undergraduate and graduate courses in American literature. His research and teaching interests include American literature to 1900, literature and history, and early American print culture. His book manuscript, The Secular History of a Sacred Space: Narrating Community in Seventeenth-Century New England, is nearing completion. This fall, Miles will teach ENGL 3070: American Literature I.

Joshua Wheeler is from Alamogordo, New Mexico. He's a graduate of the University of Southern California, New Mexico State University and has an MFA in Creative Nonfiction from the University of Iowa. His essays have appeared in The Missouri Review, Harper's, BuzzFeed, [Pank] and many others. He co-edited the anthology We Might as Well Call it the Lyric Essay and his first book, Acid West, is forthcoming from FSG. This year, Wheeler joins LSU as an Assistant Professor and will teach ENGL 2025: Fiction (The New Novella) and a graduate Creative Nonfiction workshop (ENGL 7001) this fall.

Sunny Yang (Ph.D., University of Pennsylvania) is a new Assistant Professor of English. She comes to LSU having spent 2014-15 at the American Academy of Arts and Sciences as a Visiting Scholar. Her teaching and research interests include 19th and early 20th century American literature (particularly ethnic and African American literature), critical race theory, and law and literature. Her book manuscript, Fictions of Territoriality: Legal and Literary Narratives of US Contestation Zones, is currently in progress. This fall, Yang will teach ENGL 2673: Asian American Literature and ENGL 3070: American Literature I.
